Can PPR Schemes Break Out of 'unliveable' mould?

A story to inspire.....

Hussin Yahya never tires of the view of the playground from his second-floor flat at the low-cost housing in Pandan Utama, Ampang, Selangor.

The 67-year-old retiree, who has been staying at the 12-storey Rumah Pangsa Pandan Utama since 2003, enjoys watching children on swings and teenagers playing futsal on a nearby court while the adults chat on benches.

The playground exudes an air of harmony and this sense of well-being can be felt in the rest of the housing area.

Hussin feels vindicated as his efforts to change the mindset of his 600-odd fellow flat dwellers have not been in vain, especially as 90% of them previously lived in squatter settlements.

“It was not like this before. People here used to hurl their rubbish to the ground and we had to bear the stench of urine around the place. It was hard to get residents to cooperate.
