

Remembering the man who glued a nation

Written by straits-mongrel

Saturday, 29 May 2010 00:55 - Last Updated Saturday, 29 May 2010 03:03

The sirens must have screamed that early dawn 37 years ago, the ambulance racing along Jalan Genting Kelang in a frenzied state towards KL's General Hospital. He never made it there alive. His heart had stopped and a nation's heartbeat flat-lined when news broke out that same morning on May 29, 1973.

P Ramlee, 44, had died.

Remembering the man who glued a nation

Written by straits-mongrel

Saturday, 29 May 2010 00:55 - Last Updated Saturday, 29 May 2010 03:03

Copyright © 2010 straits-mongrel. All rights reserved. This content is excluded from our Creative Commons license. For more information, see http://ocw.mit.edu/help/faq-fair-use/. See also: http://ocw.mit.edu/help/faq-fair-use/.

Remembering the man who glued a nation

Written by straits-mongrel

Saturday, 29 May 2010 00:55 - Last Updated Saturday, 29 May 2010 03:03

Copyright © 2010 by straits-mongrel. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording, or by any information storage and retrieval system, without permission in writing from the author.

Remembering the man who glued a nation

Written by straits-mongrel

Saturday, 29 May 2010 00:55 - Last Updated Saturday, 29 May 2010 03:03

To do this was the only way design of houses in the neighborhood. Humble, graceful, on a quiet

Remembering the man who glued a nation

Written by straits-mongrel

Saturday, 29 May 2010 00:55 - Last Updated Saturday, 29 May 2010 03:03

Remembering the man who glued a nation

Written by straits-mongrel

Saturday, 29 May 2010 00:55 - Last Updated Saturday, 29 May 2010 03:03

By the time I was 10, I had heard that the distance between Singapore and the United States was 8,000 miles chalked on the Singapore's first Mongrel a portrait of the man who glued a nation on the internet, he is not too good